

How to find your Routing Number and Account Numbers

The MICR line appears at the bottom of the check. It consists of three groups of numbers, including the bank routing number, the customer's account number, and the check number (See example above). A check number is not needed to set up an ACH payment; however, you must know your bank's routing number and full account number. If you do not have a physical check, you will need to call your financial institution to request your MICR numbers. Please be aware that your full MICR account number (12 digits) is longer than your account number. This full account number is critical for setting up direct deposits and automatic withdrawals from your accounts.

The Routing numbers are made public on the financial institution's website. We have included a few examples here of common regional banks/credit unions in Alaska.

Global Credit Union- 325272021
Credit Union 1- 325272063
Denali FCU- 325272047
KeyBank- 125200879
Northrim Bank- 125200934
First National Bank AK- 125200060
Wells Fargo Alaska- 125200057

For many financial institutions, your routing number depends on where you open your account. Check to make sure which state you open your account number at.

This is meant to be a guide; for exact information, please get in touch with your financial institution directly.
